Re: Wacom's Cintiq goes mobile

Staying on top of evolving trends in the creative community and responding to frequent requests from professional customers, Wacom extends the creative experience from the desktop to a mobile environment with the new Cintiq Companion line of creative tablets.

The Cintiq Companion line, available in two models, enables creative professionals to work wherever they want. The Cintiq Companion runs Windows 8 and full versions of creative software and offers everything a customer would expect from Wacom's Cintiq products. The Cintiq Companion Hybrid, on the other hand, is a traditional Cintiq when plugged into a Mac or PC, but when used as a mobile device, works as a stand-alone AndroidTM tablet with enough power to do light sketching and start creative processes with suitable apps. The new tablets were developed to bring unprecedented freedom to the creative workflow. They also ensure a distinct Cintiq experience even in mobile use, leveraging key elements of the Cintiq 13HD and Cintiq 22HD touch, for example, full HD display with touch control and the Wacom Pro Pen with 2048 levels of pressure and tilt sensitivity.

- Further development and effect on the financial forecast for new models

The Cintiq Companion line will be available from Wacom eStore from end of September in Japan. Availability varies in regions. Wacom aims to sell 50,000 units worldwide within the 1st year after the product is launched.

There will be no revision for the consolidated FY13 financial forecast as of April 30, 2013 by the new models' shipments.
